Reflection of the week – Mari Palmer, Diocesan director of Education
In the run up to Easter we are going to explore the work of Moore Liberation Theology group looking at the Christian (and those of us working in our church schools) drive to serve the poor.
Church of England schools are established primarily for the communities they are located in and were founded by parishes to serve the poorest children. They are inclusive and serve equally those who are of the Christian faith, those of other faiths and those with no faith.
This week is the first of these parts:
The Christian mission of schools, which you may share in whether you believe or not is drawn from the call to serve the poor which resonates deeply within Christian teachings, reflecting Christ's love and compassion for all people. Christians (and those of us working in our church schools) are encouraged to help those in need, offering not just material support but hope, dignity, and spiritual nourishment. This duty is not merely an act of charity but can be a profound expression of faith in action. Whether through organised efforts or personal acts of kindness, helping the poor fulfils the Christian mission to uplift and restore communities.
We can express our commitment to serving the poor through various practical means. Engaging in volunteer work at food banks, shelters, and community organizations is a hands-on approach to making a difference. Supporting initiatives that provide education, healthcare, and housing to the underserved creates lasting change. On a personal level, small acts like donating clothing or offering mentorship can transform lives. We are also encouraged to advocate for social justice, addressing root causes of poverty. Each effort, no matter how small, reflects Christ's love in action or supports our schools' vision.
What can we do in Lent to fulfil the purpose of our church schools?

Yours sincerely

MK Hunt
